Course Aims

This course has been designed to equip you with both the subject knowledge and the transferrable skills which you will need in order to pursue a successful career in law, as well as in a range of other professional environments.

By studying this course, you will gain an in-depth knowledge of the foundations of legal knowledge subjects which are a requirement of a qualifying law degree and you will develop the ability to apply your legal knowledge to factual scenarios, using it to advise and resolve complex issues on behalf of your clients. You will be encouraged to demonstrate intellectual independence to identify key issues which need researching and carry out academic enquiry from a range of primary legal sources, policy documents and writings by legal scholars.

Through the study of the Psychology units on the course, you will become familiar with the issues, techniques and debates at the forefront of practice in criminal, investigative and forensic psychology and develop your understanding of the professional skills that you might use as a forensic practitioner. You will be provided with a framework to understand the role of psychologists in developing our understanding of why individuals commit specific crimes, and the important role which psychology plays in the treatment of offenders post-sentencing.

Course Learning Outcomes	Upon successful completion of your course you should meet the appropriate learning outcomes for your award shown in the table below
